

Prodigal Theatre, Urban Playground Team, UK

Prodigal Theatre [Urban Playground Team] led a workshop called The Parkour Workshop in the last three days of INFANT 2009. During each day the participants together with their leaders were able to work hardly for five hours in order that each evening will end with one short performance. In the first two evenings the audience could see two pieces of work of five-ten minutes each, in the last day they presented all the pieces together, being actually performance called "Micro-Choreographies".

Alistair O'Loughlin, on behalf of Urban Playground Team, stated at the end of this performance called Micro-Choreographies that the participants, even some of them didn't have any previous experience in dance, were very determined and full of energy. Some of the participants come also from far away just to be able to participate at this workshop.
